Biographical Note

Frederick Gibson Butler was born May 12, 1915 in Laurium, Michigan. He attended Houghton High School and, after graduation, attended Michigan Technological University to earn a degree in engineering. From 1941 until 1981, Butler was employed as an engineer in the field of advanced engine studies at the Oldsmobile Division of General Motors in Lansing, Michigan. In 1977, Butler wrote a short article that recounts the creation of the first Oldsmobile Rocket V-8 called "The Rocket Engine Story by One Who Was There". Starting in 1980 and continuing after his retirement from Oldsmobile, Butler was an instructor in the Engineering Department at Michigan State University (MSU). During the academic year of 1994, Butler was given the MSU Honorary Alumni Award. In 1996, Butler was nominated and became a Fellow of the Society of Automobile Engineers (SAE). F. Gibson Butler died in 2006.

From 1948 to the later 1980s, Butler pursued the hobby of amateur cinematography. He created and edited footage of his family, engineering projects, sports events, circus performances and nature. Butler would broadcast some of these films as form of a community service, especially the high school basketball footage, and he toured Michigan elementary schools to show short films on the Hospitaler and Ringling Brothers Circus performances.

Scope and Content Note

The F. Gibson Butler Papers are organized into four series. The correspondence series (1919-1997) encompasses letters sent from and to the Butler family and are broadly divided into family, professional, and social correspondence. His family regularly wrote to one another. Consequently, this series provides insight into the war effort during 1941 to 1946, living in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan during the second half of the twentieth century, and his daughter attending college from 1966 to 1970. Especially noteworthy, there are several letters that document the reaction to the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor and life in the United States during World War II (Box 1, Folder 2). This correspondence series also features some details regarding Butler's professional life as an Oldsmobile engineer and social life as a member of the Explorers Club and the Freemasons. Of special interest, researcher may want to consult Butler's letters from fellow Freemasons (Box 2, Folder 15), several letters chronicle Post-World War II reconstruction in Tokyo and elsewhere.

The second series, Personal Interests (1940-2003) features Butler's film notes that can account for details about his amateur cinematography and editing process, including film timing, film scores, and film content. This series also contains drafts of papers and speeches given by Butler and clippings about Butler, his family, and the Northern Michigan region where he grew up. A folder of photographs is arranged chronologically, a majority of the photographs are color, whereas there are several photographs that are black and white. Within the clippings, there is a biographical article about Butler, written in 1997.

The third series (1946-2006) is a collection of the many greeting cards sent to Butler and his family. F. Gibson Butler retained many of the greeting card sent to him and his family from October 1946 to December 2006. These cards mark the passing of holidays, his network of support, and his close relationship with friends and family. The series contains, in general, Christmas and Season's Greetings cards, but also includes birthday, Saint Valentine's, Easter, and 'get well soon' cards. In addition, this series includes greeting cards sent in support or sympathy to Butler and his family marking the long hospital stay and death of his daughter Mary Ruth Butler, the death of his daughter Sandra Butler, and the death of his wife, Bernadine Butler. About ten percent of the greeting cards were collected to make up this series, a sampling of the greeting cards sent to Butler and his family. Out of roughly 1275 greeting cards, roughly 155 cards were retained. The cards are arranged in chronological order, with significant events separated into individual folders

The fourth series (1949-2000) collects the film and audio footage taken and edited by Butler. As an amateur cinematographer, Butler filmed a number of different subjects throughout his life. A majority of the material filmed offers an intimate glimpse into the life of his family, their vacations, and their holiday traditions, and his professional life as engineer at the Oldsmobile Research and Development Center in Lansing, (researchers may also want to consult the object reports for the museum objects 76.31.1 and 2001.102.4). As a public service, Butler filmed various circus performances, which he would organize into presentations to be broadcasted publicly at elementary schools and social functions. Furthermore, Butler filmed the subjects that he had an intellectual or environmental interest in; consequently, nature, rivers, and wildlife are often filmed as well.

The films are arranged chronologically and according to the size of the film or reel. Moreover, the films are organized, broadly, by subject. Researchers may want to consult Butler's film notes (Box 2, Folder 15 through Folder 19), arranged with the Papers of F. Gibson Butler, for additional information about the films and the construction of the films. For the purposes of arrangement and retrieval, the films have been numbered in the order that the films were appraised and reviewed. The audio recordings have been organized chronologically and their original labeling has been indicated as well. These recordings correspond with the circus, nature, and family films. The Excel spreadsheets that were used as the film and audio recordings were inventoried have been included to provide additional information and access into the film and audio collection. A brief subject index is provided at the end of the film container description, the index appears on page 8.
